

The locality is mentioned as early as 839. Up until the 16th century, it formed one parish with Hosingen; then it became an independent entity comprising around 10 localities. The nave and the belfry go back to the 12th century and are the oldest parts of the present church. A new chancel was built in 1467. Some years later the nave was given a vaulted ceiling. A chapel was erected on the south side for the Lords of Clervaux, whose family members were buried the church up until 1602. The portico was added in 1699, the sacristy in 1750. After the Second World War there were several restoration schemes, the last of which was finished in 2016.

Main altar

Made in 1705 by Jean Tous-saint of Bastogne. The central niche houses the statue of Saint Hubert, the church's patron saint.

Eucharistic tabernacle

Wall niche formerly intended for the reservation of blessed hosts.

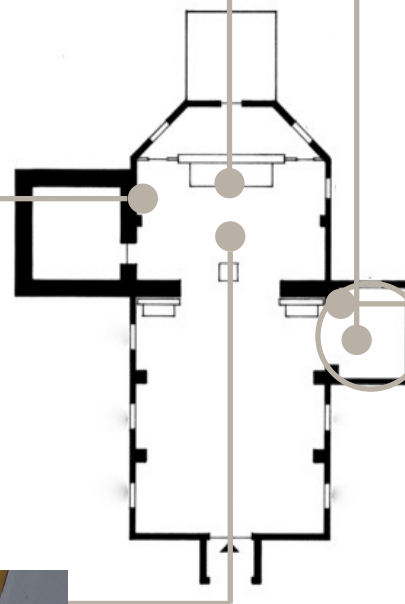

Armorial keystones of the ceiling vault

Coats of arms of the Frederick II of Brandenburg and his wife Françoise d'Argenteau.

Frescoes

Representation of the symbols of the four Evangelists: man/angel (Matthew), lion (Mark), bull (Luke), eagle (John).

Memorial plaques

Seven plaques refer to deceased family members of the Lords of Clervaux.

Chapel

Constructed for the Lords of Clervaux in 1470.

Text : Alex Langini
Fotos : Laure Simon
Ground : Forschungsstelle
Glasmalerei
ErwuesseBildung 2018